Objectives of the Seminar:

Cancer, known medically as a malignant neoplasm, is a broad group of various diseases, all involving unregulated cell division and cell growth. The cancer may also spread to more distant parts of the body through the lymphatic system or bloodstream. Not all tumors are cancerous and do not spread throughout body. There are over 200 different known cancers that afflict humans.

Most cancers have multiple possible causes, but many things are known to increase the risk of cancer such as use of tobacco, constant smoking, radiation, environmental pollutants, obesity etc. Only 5-10% of cancers are entirely hereditary.

The main objective of the seminar is to

Aware the students, teachers, research workers, and common people regarding the risk of cancer related to food and other substances and probable ways to prevent them. We have to overcome some bad food habits which accelerate cancer and should take healthy food substances like fibre containing fresh substances, vitamin D, food with omega fatty acids etc.
